

PROJECT 03:

FOUND TEXT & IMAGE

From "The Goya Series", John Baldessari

Project Description

In this project, you will explore the dynamic relationship between images and text to create compelling visual narratives. The objective is to understand how images and text can be combined to convey messages, evoke emotions, and tell stories that are greater than the sum of their parts. A good designer understands that both images and text are valuable tools in their toolbox - you can create a wide variety of meaning and context by being thoughtful in how you combine the two. This project will emphasize the importance of both aesthetic appeal and clear communication, encouraging you to think critically about how visual and textual elements interact to make meaning in various contexts.

You will explore an archive of images, experimenting with and selecting photographs that best complement a group of randomly assigned texts. By delving into the archive, you will consider the historical, cultural, and contextual significance of your chosen images. What is the original purpose, audience, and message behind each photograph? How can these elements be recontextualized to support new narratives and design goals?

To begin, start digging into one of the archives listed below. Pay attention to what images catch your eye, but don't overthink it - go with your gut and trust your design instincts. Make a selection of 10 images, and deconstruct how they work visually using the Language of Vision terms. We will diagram the principles and elements together in class.

2d for this project are listed below. These are all system fonts, but if you don't have any for some reason you can download them to your computer from here, or install them through

Once your first images are chosen, you will be randomly assigned found text (more on that soon). Take some time to reflect upon your text. Are there any themes that are present throughout? What does your text make you think of? Think through some ways it can be represented visually. Start to look for connections between your text and your first round of photographs. At this point, we'll go back to your chosen archive and select 5 more images that you feel are related to your text. This can be as concrete or as abstract as you want, but consider how the meaning of your text changes when it is put in relation to a single image, and vice versa. What are some compelling combinations you can create?

After you've combined one piece of text with one image, use the provided template to design a 14 page accordion booklet. Experiment with layout, size, and your Language of Vision tools to affect the meaning of each page. Remember that sequence is important too: how does the order of your pages change the overall meaning of the booklet?

Requirements:

- Choose one of the listed archives to mine for your images.
- Demonstrate professionalism through care in craftsmanship, timeliness, participation, effort, ability to give and receive feedback, take risks, and listen.

Typefaces:

- Please limit yourself to the usage of one typeface for this assignment.
- Two weights (styles) from within the same typeface family could potentially be used, if absolutely necessary.
- A limited selection of typefaces that can be use

Deliverables

- A 14-page accordion booklet (each page 4x6" vertical or 6x4" horizontal), printed and trimmed neatly to size.
- PDF version of your booklet submitted on Canvas
- A .gif of each of your booklet pages in sequential order

Goal:

To create compelling visual narratives by combining found and manufactured text and images.

Objectives:

- Explore archives in order to curate a selection of found images and text
- Communicate meaning through the placement of text and juxtaposition with imagery
- Develop an understanding of the Principles of design and how they can be represented in a photograph
